

Wandlebury - May 2008

Wandlebury Country Park is on the A1307 west of Cambridge on the chalk hills of the Gogs. Saved from becoming a housing estate by the Cambridge Preservation Society in 1954 this 110 acre estate of woodland and chalk grassland is now open to the public all year round. A new education centre has been built and this was where Class 4 spent the day to enjoy time looking at wildlife and pond dipping ...

Discovering the wide variety of wild flowers that exists in the English countryside was fun as they placed as many different plants on their strip of card. They could then compare notes!

Above are some different ways of finding insects - though sometimes they find you!

Meeting the larger livestock while walking along what used to be the ditch of an iron age hill fort.

Pond dipping with lots of strange creatures to identify.
